I know this isn't the right place to post this, but I'd like to be a bit more active in this game. What are you thoughts on all that? I also have an idea to make some kind of plugin. Something that is unique enough to the game to get people to know the game has it, but at the same time won't cause confusion. Please let me know if you have an opinion on this idea. Also, because this is my first post and due to time, I'd like you to know there's a lot of information on the wiki. If you are more interested in learning about the mod, then take a look at

What's new:

Steering - All Types F I recently experienced a typical failure of a GM steering related problem. I experienced intermittent rotational steering due to excessive binding. The left rear wheel was inoperable, causing the car to be hard to steer and also made it difficult to stop. I noticed that when I turned the steering wheel in the same direction the wheel was binding. My wife suggested I replace the forward drive axle with the infamous 3 point wiring harness that was available in GM cars. This solved the problem, but I was left unhappy since I wanted what was better. The car was an '89 Buick Century with 150,000 miles on it. I then called my Century Club rep who referred me to the GM Technical Support Advisor for steering related problems. I brought my car to him for repair and he found that the tie rod ends had worn out. There was a defect in the steering rack bearing, which resulted in excess movement of the steering. The process of replacing or rebuilding this part was very expensive and took 3-4 months to complete due to the car being a custom built car and having many parts not being standard GM parts. The Technical Support Advisor for GM told me that the car was a known problem, they sell them as such, but the car manufacturer provides technical support in very limited scenarios: If a vehicle falls off of a road into a curb while being towed, if a vehicle loses cruise control, if a vehicle brakes to hard while cornering or if a vehicle snaps out of park, the most common consumer suspension/steering related problems. The advisor told me that GM provides a recall service to replace the steering rack bearing and replace the steering arm bushings. He said that this issue did not qualify under this "limited" set of issues and that the best way to help me was to bring the car in for a recall where the steering rack bearing, steering arm bushings and tie rod end bearings are done as a one time service. My car does not have any type of power steering, only power assisted steering. The dealer I brought my car to was unwilling to provide this service. I later read of several other people experiencing or having the same issue so the problem must have been widespread. Since my car, as well as many others, had more mileage on them than the 7-8 month left in the warranty, the advisor told me that the repair involved changing the steering bearings at no charge. As a good Automotive Software Engineer, I was
