In order to determine the role of parental perception of children's physical disability on their physical activity, 163 children (103 girls, 60 boys) with a mean age of 11 years (range: 5-18 years) and their parents (81 mothers, 82 fathers) were recruited from 2 special schools for children with physical disabilities in Hong Kong. The Parental Perception of Children's Physical Disabilities Scale was employed to measure parental perceptions. Physical activity level was evaluated by using a 7-day physical activity recall. Results showed a significant positive correlation between perceived disability and physical activity among the children (r = 0.25, P = 0.010). On the other hand, perceived disability and physical activity were negatively correlated with frequency of injury among the children (r = -0.28, P = 0.004). A mediation model was employed to examine the hypothesized relationship between perceived disability and physical activity of the children. Results showed that a significant mediation effect (44%) was found. The results suggested that perceived disability was associated with children's physical activity through parental sense of responsibility for children's physical activity.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method for the purification of a peroxycarboxylic acid solution. 2. Description of Related Art Peroxycarboxylic acids such as peracetic acid are known to be useful in the bleaching of wood pulp. Peracetic acid is typically produced from acetyl peroxide via a two-step process. Acetyl peroxide is generated in a hydrogen peroxide-containing aqueous medium by heating acetyl chloride in the presence of an organic base. Acetyl peroxide may then be hydrolyzed to form peracetic acid. The half-life of the acetyl peroxide employed to manufacture acetyl per 6d1f23a050
